International Forum on Healthy Cities

Theme: International Cooperation for Healthy Cities

Friday, 29 May, 2020
16:00-19:00 Beijing Time
10:00-13:00 Central European Time

In the past two decades of this century, highly contagious viruses such as SARS, Ebola, Middle East Respiratory Syndrome and COVID-19 broke out and spread all over the world. These public health emergencies have posed great impact on cities which are densely populated. Building safe, healthy, resilient and sustainable cities and human settlements is one of the Sustainable Development Goals of the United Nations, and an important issue in the New Urban Agenda. It is necessary for social organizations, urban planners and researchers, decision-makers, as well as scholars of all countries to gather together to discuss the challenges the urban planning and urban governance are faced in dealing with the epidemics, introduce examples to showcase good practices from different countries, and seek innovative solutions to build healthy cities.

Sponsored by:

China Association for Science and Technology

Organized by:

Urban Planning Society of China

United Nations Human Settlements Programme

International Society of City and Regional Planners

Topics:

- Delimiting rationality of scale and density of a healthy city and its neighborhood.
- Improving governance to build safe, resilient and sustainable human settlements.
- Leading towards a healthy and vibrant urban life through enhancing quality of public space.
